“We have a puncture,” said Sadic, the bus driver, he stopped the bus by the side of the road. He quickly unfastened his seat belt and got out of the bus. He walked round the bus and checked each of the wheels.

The rear left wheel had a puncture and it was actually flat. Sadic told the bus conductor to quickly take the hazard signs from the boot and put one in front and the other behind the bus.

The conductor put the signs about fifty metres from the bus. The passengers got out of the bus and some went to help Sadic. They put stones in front of each of the front wheels. And also in front of the rear right wheel.

The stones would help to stop the bus from moving as they changed the tyre.

“Where is the wheel spanner and the jack?” Sadic asked.

“They are right here,” said the bus conductor. “Do you want us to begin removing the flat wheel?”

“Yes! Right now! We should get to the nearest petrol station before night fall. We need to repair the puncture. Please hurry,” he said as he squatted behind the conductor.
